New Propeller for Canals.

The Scientific American in a recent article, remarks, that the continual annoyance and great expense attending the use of animal power on canals in the transportation of freight, together with the low rate of speed thus obtained, have led to many attempts to employ steam as a superior and more economical substitute. On canals of very moderate depth (such as the new York and Eric and the James River and Kanawha,) these experiments, we understand, have not led to such favorable results as many persons anticipated. We therefore feel assured that the importance of the subject will secure a candid examination of any improvement or plan which has for its object the removal of any difficulties which stand in the way of entire success in this system of public transport .--The obstacles to full success in canal navigation are first pointed out. The first is, improperly modeled boats, which have caused too great a a swell in the water, even at comparatively low speeds; a second is, the great bulk, weight, and expense for boilers and machinery, and fuel to rnn them; a third is, injury to the banks of the canal by the waves when a high speed has been attempted; fourth frequent breakage of the exposed propeller blades by striking against the banks, and other objects, also by becoming entangled with tow lines. These difficulties are all designed to be removed by Montgomery's "Archimedean Steam Canal boat." space required for machinery, boilers, &c., about equal to that used for horses on those boats which carry their own teams. It is stated that about two tons of coal only are required to be put in as fuel, for a trip .-Mr. Montgomery's boat is also designed for the lakes and rivers as well as for canals, so as to run through at a good speed without reshipment of cargo.

The Cincinnati Suicide.

In our issue of the 9th we published the account of the suicide of a Hungarian woman in presence of her husband. The Cincinnati Enquirer of the 6th contains the following additional particulars:

Emanuel Gerard, after the suicide of his wife, evening before last, became frantic with grief and acted in such a manner, while the Coroner's jury was in his house, that they could not proceed with the investigation, and it became necessray to lock him up in the Bremen street station-house. Among other things, Emanuel wished to cut his wife up, pack her away, and send her to Europe, or to burn the body and transmit the ashes across the ocean, and no doubt he would have done so had he been allowed to act as he chose; for he was a perfect specimen of a madman. It was deemed prudent to keep Gerard in the cells until last evening, and when released he was placed in charge of one of his friends, lest he might do violence to himself or others.'

He died after a lingering illness, on Saturday morning last. He was an exemplary young man. All his actions were regulated and controlled by a high-toned morality. He was intelligent, high minded, and of inflexible integrity. No youth in Cumberland sustained a character more immaculate in its purity. It was all that could be desired in man .he was the idol of an affectionate mother's heart, her only son; and never did son return a mother's devotion with profounder love. To his sisters be was the living embodiment of goodness; and their grief at this dispensation of Providence which transported him hence, caused many who knew and appreciated the character of that dear brother. to shed sympathetic tears over the cold grave in which his mortal remains shall sleep evermore. Should that Convention honor me with the nomination, it will be a source of gratification to my friends and ayself, and it elected, I promise to do all within my power of energy and ability, to carry out all measures of interest to the State and the county; in particular "I do not dodge any question." The syster and the free negro bills, and the protection our slave property, are my hobbies, and all things that may appear to my mind for the best interests of the community. The money market continues very easy, with a limited demand.
